A Sweetly Beautiful Poem.

Who wrote the following exquisite lines we do not know, but whoever did, need never write anything else to convince the world that he or she is a poet of the sweetest and tenderest thoughts in the language. We think we have never read anything so deliciously, so entirely beautiful.-Exchange.

"I am weary of the garden,"
Said the Rose;
"For the winter winds are sighing,

All my playmates round me dying, And my leaves will soon be lying, 'Neath the snows.

Than the Bee! Ah, how feebly I resisted. Smoothed my thorns and e'en assisted, As all blushing I was twisted Off my tree.

"And she fixed me in her bosom Like a star; And I flashed there all the morning, Jesamine, honeysuckle scorning, Parasites forever fawning That they are.

"And when evening came she sat me In a vase, All of rare and radiant metal, And I felt her red lips settle On my leaves till each proud petal

Like a light; And I said instead of weeping, In the garden vigil keeping, Here I'll watch my mistress sleeping. Every night.

But when morning with its sunbeams Softly shone. In the mirror where she braided Her brown hair, I saw how jaded, Old and colorless and faded,

"Not a drop of dew was on me, Never one: From my leaves no odor started, All my perfume had departed, I lay pale and broken-hearted

"Still, I said, her smile is better Than the rain; Though my fragrance may forsake me, To her bosom she will take me, And with crimson kisses make me Young again.

Half a sigh-Then, alas! can harts so harden? Without ever asking pardon,

There to die. "And the jealous garden gloried In my fall!

How the honeysuckles chid me, How the sneering jesamines bid me Light the long, dark grass that hid me Like a pall.

"There I lay beneath her window In a swoon,

To the moon.

"But I hear the storm winds stirring In their lair, And I know they soon will lift me

In their gians arms and sift me Into ashes as they drift me Through the air.

Just to take From my heart of hearts, or near it, The last living leaf and bear it To her feet, and bid her wear it For my sake."
